Abstract:-

Halal certification (HC) system is a process of checking, verifying and certifying all activities involved in the halal products or services which comply with halal standards. One of the main critical processes in HC is known as halal inspection. In Malaysia, halal inspection is a mandatory process that must be conducted physically at the halal industry premises. Halal virtual inspection (HVI) is a new innovation proposes in HC system which aim to support the current monotonous and time-consuming halal certification process. The objective of this paper is to identify the acceptance factors of the halal industry towards the implementation of halal virtual inspection. The extension of technology acceptance model (ETAM) is adapted in this study. A survey has been distributed to 86 respondents who are halal industry players such as producers and consumers of Food and Beverages sector. The findings reveal that there are six factors influences the acceptance of the virtual halal inspection. The six factors are perceived usefulness, perceived ease of use, perceived enjoyment, amount of information, perceived security, and trust. These factors will assist the halal certification body to conduct effective, efficient and trusted virtual halal inspection process.
